Vineyard Worker

Vineyard workers combine a passion for nature, science and wine to help grow grapes and make, bottle, warehouse, and package wines.

What vineyard workers do

Vineyard workers help winemakers produce wine. They're integral to day-to-day operations and perform many tasks from processing fruit through to fermentation, finishing and maturing wine.

Depending on the size of the winery, vineyard workers may be involved in all aspects of work or may specialise in laboratory work, bottling or cellar door sales.

Under the instruction of the viticulturist, vineyard workers prepare the ground for planting by fertilising and oxygenating the soil using hoes or tractors. They then install irrigation systems and trellises.

They train the vines to grow along trellises and weed and spray for harmful insects.

As harvest approaches, vineyard workers remove unripe bunches so pickers only choose quality fruit. In winter, vines are pruned to cut away old growth.

Manual labour involves filling barrels, transferring wine between tanks, and cleaning. Vineyard workers may also make chemical adjustments to wines in the lab.

Will I get a job?

Strong growth in this occupation is predicted, with 3,200 new jobs in Australia in the next four years, bringing the total to 33,900.

What will I earn?

Up to $950 median full-time weekly salary (before tax, excluding super).
