

Workplace gender affirmation plan

Confidential - contains personal and health information.

The workplace gender affirmation plan ('the plan') outlines the details agreed by the employee affirming their gender at work and their manager to guide a safe and positive experience. The plan is confidential and will remain with the employee, manager and/or agreed key contact person unless express consent is provided by the employee.

This template may be customised by adding or removing sections to meet the employee's specific needs or circumstances. The plan can be developed in conjunction with the workplace gender affirmation checklist.

Informing colleagues and other parties

Managers and employees affirming their gender should:

- establish a clear understanding of what information is to be shared with colleagues, students, clients and other stakeholders
- establish how the information will be shared
- decide who has responsibility for sharing it, and for what purpose.

Managers must have written consent from the employee affirming their gender before sharing any personal information.

Records about an employee's gender affirmation are confidential and require secure storage in a location accessible only to the employee and their manager.
